I. Statement of the Petitioner

Pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. § 553(e), and Rule 192(a) of the Securities and Exchange Commission’s (“SEC” or “Commission”) Rules, 17 C.F.R. § 201.192(a), the New Civil Liberties Alliance (NCLA) hereby petitions the Securities and Exchange Commission to initiate a rulemaking proceeding to promulgate regulations prohibiting any Commission component from issuing, relying on, or defending improper agency guidance. This rule would formalize and make more permanent policies and best practices from other agencies concerning any agency guidance that improperly attempts to create rights or obligations binding on persons or entities outside the Commission. As hereby proposed, it also would provide affected parties with a means of redress for improper agency action.

II. Summary of the Petition

Even though both the Constitution and the Administrative Procedure Act prohibit the practice, federal agencies often engage in the “commonplace and dangerous” acts of issuing informal interpretations, advice, statements of policy, and other forms of “guidance” that “make law simply by declaring their views about what the public should do.” Philip Hamburger, Is Administrative Law Unlawful? 114, 260 (2014). This practice evades legal requirements, and often is “used for the purpose of coercing persons or entities outside the federal government into taking any action or refraining from taking any action beyond what is required by the terms of the applicable statute or regulation.” Ibid. And despite being prohibited by law, improper guidance is typically “immuniz[ed]” from judicial review by procedural limits. Appalachian Power Co. v. Env’tl. Prot. Agency, 208 F.3d 1015, 1020 (D.C. Cir. 2000). This conduct results in a form of illegal and unconstitutional “extortion” where agencies obtain compliance through “extralegal lawmaking.” Hamburger, supra, at 115, 260.

To rein in these abuses, NCLA proposes that the Commission issue a rule prohibiting the Commission or any of its offices from issuing, relying on, or defending the validity of improper guidance. The proposed rule not only adopts existing legal limitations on such improper agency action, but, critically, also creates a permanent and binding set of limits on departmental practice. The proposed rule also sets out a means to enforce these limits by empowering regulated parties to petition the Commission to rescind improper guidance and to seek judicial review of improper agency actions.

III. Statement of Interest

The New Civil Liberties Alliance is a nonprofit civil rights organization founded to defend constitutional rights through original litigation, amicus curiae briefs, and other means. The “civil liberties” of the organization’s name include rights at least as old as the U.S. Constitution itself, such as jury trial, due process of law, the right to live under laws made by the nation’s elected lawmakers rather than by prosecutors or bureaucrats, and the right to be tried in front of an impartial and independent judge whenever the government brings cases against private parties.

NCLA defends civil liberties by asserting constitutional constraints on the administrative state. Although Americans still enjoy the shell of their Republic, there has developed within it a very different sort of government—a type, in fact, that the Constitution was framed to prevent. This unconstitutional administrative state within the Constitution’s United States violates more rights of more Americans than any other aspect of American law, and it is therefore the focus of NCLA’s efforts.

Even where NCLA has not yet brought a suit to challenge an agency’s unconstitutional exercise of administrative power, it encourages agencies themselves to curb the unlawful exercise of such power by respecting constitutional limits on administrative rulemaking, guidance, adjudication, and enforcement. The courts are not the only government bodies with the duty to attend to the law. Even more immediately, agencies and agency heads have a duty to follow the law, not least by avoiding unlawful modes of governance. NCLA therefore advises that all agencies and agency heads must examine whether their modes of rulemaking, guidance, adjudication, and enforcement comply with the APA and with the Constitution.

NCLA is thus an “interested” party concerning the proposed rule set out in this document. See 5 U.S.C. § 553(e).

IV. Legal Authority to Promulgate the Rule

This petition for rulemaking is submitted pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 553(e), which provides any “interested person the right to petition [an agency] for the issuance ... of a rule.”

The Commission has “authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title” under 15 U.S.C. § 77s (§ 19 of the Securities Act of 1933), and such rules and regulations shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. 15 U.S.C. § 78w (§ 23(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934), 15 U.S.C. § 77sss (§ 319 of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939), 15 U.S.C. 80a-37 (§ 38 of the Investment Company Act of 1940), 15 U.S.C. § 80b-11 (§ 211 of the Investment Advisors Act of 1940), and 15 U.S.C. §7202 (§ 3 of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Corporate Responsibility Act of 2002 “Sarbanes-Oxley Act” provides additional statutory rulemaking authority for the Commission, subject to notice and comment.

When an agency engages in rulemaking procedures it must abide by the requirements set out in 5 U.S.C. § 553.

V. Reasons for Creating the Rule

A. Legal Background

No agency has any inherent power to make law. Article I, § 1 of the U.S. Constitution vests “[a]ll legislative powers” in the Congress, and “the lawmaking function belongs to Congress ... and may not be conveyed to another branch or entity.” Loving v. United States, 517 U.S. 748, 758 (1996). This is a constitutional barrier to an exercise of legislative power by an agency. Further, “an agency literally has no power to act ... unless and until Congress confers power upon it.” La. Pub. Serv. Comm’n v. FCC, 476 U.S. 355, 374 (1986). Thus, even if an agency could constitutionally exercise legislative power, it cannot purport to bind anyone without congressional authorization.

And, instead of conferring such power, Congress has categorically prohibited the issuance of binding guidance. The Administrative Procedure Act (APA) was passed in 1946 in order “to introduce greater uniformity of procedure and standardization of administrative practice among the diverse agencies whose customs had departed widely from each other.” Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U.S. 33, 41, modified on other grounds by 339 U.S. 908 (1950). As a result, it sets out a comprehensive set of rules governing administrative action.

Consistent with this design, the APA established a process by which agencies could engage in “rule making.” 5 U.S.C. § 553. The APA explains that a “rule” “means the whole or a part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency.” 5 U.S.C. § 551(4).

Rules, on the whole, may be promulgated by agencies only following notice-and-comment procedures. First, an agency must post a “general notice” of the proposed rulemaking in a prominent place and seek commentary from private parties. 5 U.S.C. § 553(b). This notice must set out “the time, place and nature” of the proposed “public rule making proceedings,” “the legal authority under which the rule is proposed,” and “either the terms or substance of the proposed rule or a description of the subjects and issues involved.” Id. at §§ 553(b)(1)-(3).

After the notice has been set out, the agency must “give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views, or arguments.” Id. at § 553(c). “An agency must consider and respond to significant comments received during the period for public comment.” Perez v. Mortgage Bankers Ass’n, 135 S. Ct. 1199, 1203 (2015). In response to submitted comments, a “general statement” of the purpose of the rules must also be “incorporate[d] in the rules adopted.” 5 U.S.C. § 553(c).

The APA’s notice-and-comment period “does not apply ... to interpretive rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization procedure, or practice.” Id. at § 553(b). Instead, this requirement applies only to “substantive rules,” which are sometimes referred to as “legislative rules.” Mendoza v. Perez, 754 F.3d 1002, 1021 (D.C. Cir. 2014); see also 5 U.S.C. § 553(d) (distinguishing between “substantive” and “interpretive” rules for publication and service).

A “substantive” or “legislative” rule is any “agency action that purports to impose legally binding obligations or prohibitions on regulated parties.” Nat’l Mining Ass’n v. McCarthy, 758 F.3d 243, 251 (D.C. Cir. 2014). Stated differently: “A rule is legislative if it supplements a statute, adopts a new position inconsistent with existing regulations, or otherwise effects a substantive change in existing law or policy.” Mendoza, 754 F.3d at 1021. Such “legislative rules” have the “force and effect of law.” Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 302-03 (1979).

Legislative rules are also accorded deference from courts. See United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218, 230 (2001).

In contrast, “interpretive rules” are not subject to notice-and-comment requirements. Mendoza, 754 F.3d at 1021. Interpretative rules “do not have the force and effect of law and are not accorded that weight in the adjudicatory process.” Shalala v. Guernsey Mem’l Hosp., 514 U.S. 87, 99 (1995).

An interpretative rule is any “agency action that merely interprets a prior statute or regulation, and does not itself purport to impose new obligations or prohibitions or requirements on regulated parties.” Nat’l Mining Ass’n, 758 F.3d at 252. “[I]nterpretive rules ... are issued by an agency to advise the public of the agency’s construction of the statutes and rules which it administers.” Perez, 135 S. Ct. at 1204 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). Such a rule simply “describes the agency’s view of the meaning of an existing statute or regulation.” Batterton v. Marshall, 648 F.2d 694, 702 n. 34 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

Aside from merely being a technical requirement under the APA, the notice-and-comment process serves important purposes. As the Supreme Court has explained, “Congress contemplates administrative action with the effect of law when it provides for a relatively formal administrative procedure tending to foster the fairness and deliberation that should underlie a pronouncement of such force.” Mead Corp., 533 U.S. at 230. “APA notice and comment” is one such formal procedure, “designed to assure due deliberation.” Ibid (quoting Smiley v. Citibank (South Dakota) N.A., 517 U.S. 735, 741 (1996)).

Informal interpretations, such as policy statements, agency manuals, enforcement guidelines and opinion letters “lack the force of law” and warrant, at best, only limited “respect” from courts concerning matters of interpretation. Christensen v. Harris County, 529 U.S. 576, 587 (2000). Further, to the extent that a court grants any “respect” to these interpretations, the strength of such respect varies widely depending on the degree of formality employed by the agency. See Mead Corp., 533 U.S. at 228 (discussing the deference owed to agency decisions). It depends in many instances on an agency’s use of “notice-and-comment rulemaking or formal adjudication.” Id. at 228-30 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). A court gives the least amount of respect to “agency practice [that lacks] any indication [the agency] set out with a lawmaking pretense in mind” when it acted. Id. at 233.

Despite the relatively straightforward legal distinction, it is not always easy for courts or regulators to draw practical distinctions between “legislative” and “interpretive” rules. Because each agency action is unique, determining whether a given agency action is a legislative rule or interpretive rule “is an extraordinarily case-specific endeavor.” Am. Hosp. Ass’n v. Bowen, 834 F.2d 1037, 1045 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

Perhaps because of this difficulty, or perhaps for more invidious reasons, agencies continue to promulgate legislative rules under the guise of being mere guidance, without following the notice-and-comment requirements of the APA. Accordingly, courts have often struck down such rules. See, e.g., Mendoza, 754 F.3d at 1025 (vacating guidance documents as legislative rules that failed to comply with APA notice-and-comment requirements); Elec. Privacy Info. Ctr. v. U.S. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 653 F.3d 1, 8 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (same); Hemp Indus. Ass’n v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 333 F.3d 1082, 1091 (9th Cir. 2003) (same); Nat’l Family Planning & Reprod. Health Ass’n, Inc. v. Sullivan, 979 F.2d 227, 231 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (same).

This includes, for example, a rule enacted by the SEC in 2003 requiring institutions to adopt and disclose policies for proxy voting intended to minimize conflicts between the institution's interests and those of their shareholders. A later SEC staff interpretation of that rule has led to a result almost the opposite of the rule's intent, allowing institutions to shift responsibility to proxy advisory firms that have acquired increasing power over corporate governance, to the detriment of shareholders. See, James K. Glassman, How to Fix our Broken Proxy Advisory System, Mercatus Center Studies, April 16, 2013. In addition, in Lucia v. Securities and Exchange Commission, ___ U.S. ___ (2018) the United States Supreme Court ordered a retrial before a new administrative law judge ("ALJ") of an administrative proceeding in which the ALJ, among other things, newly found that a practice that had earlier passed muster with FINRA, now violated the securities laws.

But the prevalence of court invalidation of improper guidance vastly understates the problem, as "extralegal" agency action "usually occurs out of view." Hamburger, supra, at 260. "To escape even the notice-and-comment requirement for lawmaking interpretation, agencies increasingly make law simply by declaring their views about what the public should do." Id. at 114. Such improper guidance statements are often deliberate "evasions" of legal requirements, and "an end run around [an agency's] other modes of lawmaking." Ibid (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). In many instances, an agency's "guidance" is actually a means of "extralegal lawmaking." Id. at 115.

Agencies have strong incentives to resort to this kind of extralegal lawmaking. The "absence of a notice-and-comment obligation makes the process of issuing interpretive rules comparatively easier for agencies than issuing legislative rules." Perez, 135 S. Ct. at 1204. An agency operating in this fashion can issue rules "quickly and inexpensively without following any statutorily prescribed procedures." Appalachian Power Co., 208 F.3d at 1020. But, this results in a scenario where "[l]aw is made, without notice and comment, without public participation, and without publication in the Federal Register or the Code of Federal Regulations.” Ibid.

More troubling, “[w]hen agencies want to impose restrictions they cannot openly adopt as administrative rules, and that they cannot plausibly call ‘interpretation,’ they typically place the restrictions in guidance, advice, or other informal directives.” Hamburger, supra, at 260. This is “a sort of extortion,” because an agency can secure compliance by “threatening” enforcement or other regulatory action, even if the agency has no genuine authority to act in the first place. Id. at 260-61. An agency’s informal “views about what the public should do,” almost always comes “with the unmistakable hint that it is advisable to comply.” Id. at 114-15.

This extortion is enabled, primarily, by the unreviewability of improper guidance. Indeed, an agency often realizes that “another advantage” to issuing guidance documents, is “immunizing its lawmaking from judicial review.” Appalachian Power Co., 208 F.3d at 1020. As discussed above, legislative rules will only be invalidated for failure to conform to the notice-and-comment process after they have been determined to be legislative in the first place. This identification is neither a simple nor quick task.

Simultaneously, even invalid, binding, legislative rules may escape judicial review. The APA typically allows review only of “final agency action.” 5 U.S.C. § 704. “[T]wo conditions must be satisfied for agency action to be ‘final’: First, the action must mark the consummation of the agency’s decisionmaking process. And second, the action must be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow.” Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 177-78 (1997) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

But “an agency’s action is not necessarily final merely because it is binding.” Appalachian Power Co., 208 F.3d at 1022. An initial or interim ruling, even one that binds, “does not mark the consummation of agency decisionmaking” and thus might not constitute final agency action. Soundboard Ass’n v. Fed. Trade Comm’n, 888 F.3d 1261, 1271 (D.C. Cir. 2018); see also Ctr. for Food Safety v. Burwell, 126 F. Supp. 3d 114, 118 (D.D.C. 2015) (Contreras, J.) (discussing binding “Interim Policy” of agency that was in effect for 17 years but evaded judicial review as non-final action).

Aside from finality concerns, courts rarely consider the genuinely coercive effects of guidance documents as sufficiently binding to permit review. For example, a warning letter issued by an agency to a party, alleging a violation of a regulation, and even threatening the initiation of enforcement action, will not establish sufficient concrete “legal consequences” to permit review of final agency action. Holistic Candles & Consumers Ass’n v. Food & Drug Admin., 664 F.3d 940, 944 (D.C. Cir. 2012). Indeed, “practical consequences, such as the threat of having to defend itself in an administrative hearing should the agency actually decide to pursue enforcement, are insufficient to bring an agency’s conduct under [a court’s] purview.” Indep. Equip. Dealers Ass’n v. Env’tl. Prot. Agency, 372 F.3d 420, 428 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). Even to the extent that such action coerces compliance from a regulated entity, and even to the extent this might result in “a dramatic impact on the [affected] industry,” it still may not be considered final action subject to review. Soundboard Ass’n, 888 F.3d at 1272; see also Nat’l Mining Ass’n, 758 F.3d at 253 (agency action is not final even if a regulated entity “really has no choice when faced with [] ‘recommendations’ except to fold,” and might “feel pressure to voluntarily conform their behavior because the writing is on the wall”).

This use of guidance thus results in “commonplace and dangerous” abuses of administrative power, and “often leaves Americans at the mercy of administrative agencies.”

Hamburger, supra, at 260, 335. “It allows agencies to exercise a profound under-the-table power, far greater than the above-board government powers, even greater than the above-board administrative powers, and agencies thuggishly use it to secure what they euphemistically call ‘cooperation.’” Id. at 335. This results in an “evasion” of the Constitution, and an affront to the basic premise that laws can only be made by the Congress. Id. at 113-14; see also La. Pub. Serv. Comm’n, 476 U.S. at 374. It is also statutorily forbidden. See Mendoza, 754 F.3d at 1021. And it often results in violations of the due process of law. Hamburger, supra, at 241, 353. But, perhaps by design, such improper agency conduct routinely occurs without any hope of judicial intervention. See Appalachian Power Co., 208 F.3d at 1020.

B. Responses to These Problems So Far

1. The Bulletin for Agency Good Guidance Practices

On January 18, 2007, the Office of Management and Budget for the Executive Office of the President, addressed the ongoing problem caused by the issuance of “poorly designed or improperly implemented” “guidance documents” from administrative entities. Office of Mgmt. & Budget, Executive Office of the President, Final Bulletin for Agency Good Guidance Practices, 72 Fed. Reg. 3432, 3432 (Jan. 18, 2007) (OMB Bulletin). OMB explained that many stakeholders had ongoing “[c]oncern about whether agencies” had been improperly issuing guidance documents that actually “establish new policy positions that the agency treats as binding,” without following the notice-and-comment requirements of the APA. Id. at 3433. In addition to promulgating formal rules with the effect of law, many “agencies increasingly have relied on guidance documents to inform the public and to provide direction to their staffs.” Id. at 3432. While the bulletin characterized this practice as generally positive, it noted that many guidance documents do “not receive the benefit of careful consideration accorded under the procedures for regulatory development and review.” Worse, “[b]ecause it is procedurally easier to issue guidance documents, there also may be an incentive for regulators to issue guidance documents in lieu of regulations.” Ibid. Some of these guidance documents also improperly “establish new policy positions that the agency treats as binding,” despite failures to comply with the APA’s notice-and-comment and judicial review provisions. Id. at 3433.

To combat this problem, OMB issued its Final Bulletin to help ensure that guidance documents issued by Executive Branch departments and agencies under the OMB’s management would not improperly issue “legally binding requirements.” Ibid. First, the OMB Bulletin directed each agency to “develop or have written procedures for the approval of significant guidance documents,” in order to “ensure that the issuance of significant guidance documents is approved by appropriate senior agency officials.” Id. at 3436, 3440.

The OMB Bulletin also suggested that each significant guidance document adhere to the following:

- a. Include the term “guidance” or its functional equivalent;
- b. Identify the agenc(ies) or office(s) issuing the document;
- c. Identify the activity to which and the persons to whom the significant guidance document applies;
- d. Include the date of issuance;
- e. Note if it is a revision to a previously issued guidance document and, if so, identify the document that it replaces;
- f. Provide the title of the document, and any document identification number, if one exists;
- g. Include the citation to the statutory provision or regulation (in Code of Federal Regulations format) which it applies to or interprets; and
- h. Not include mandatory language such as “shall,” “must,” “required” or “requirement,” unless the agency is using these words to describe a statutory or regulatory requirement, or the language is addressed to agency staff and will not foreclose agency consideration of positions advanced by affected private parties.

Id. at 3440.

Finally, the OMB Bulletin suggested that each agency establish procedures for improving public access and feedback for significant guidance documents. In the case of “economically significant guidance documents,” these suggestions included following notice-and-comment procedures in certain cases. Id. at 3438.

The OMB Bulletin was limited in two important ways. First, it only applied to the issuance of “significant guidance documents” by Executive Branch agencies. Id. at 3432. This was defined as a “document disseminated to regulated entities or the general public that may reasonably be anticipated to: (i) Lead to an annual effect on the economy of $100 million or more or adversely affect in a material way the economy, a sector of the economy, productivity, competition, jobs, the environment, public health or safety, or State, local, or tribal governments or communities; (ii) Create a serious inconsistency or otherwise interfere with an action taken or planned by another agency; (iii) Materially alter the budgetary impact of entitlements, grants, user fees, or loan programs or the rights and obligations of recipients thereof; or (iv) Raise novel legal or policy issues arising out of legal mandates[.]” Id. at 3439.

Second, the OMB Bulletin did not create any means of review or redress should agencies choose to disregard it. Under a heading entitled “Judicial Review,” the Bulletin provided that it was meant only “to improve the internal management of the Executive Branch and is not intended to, and does not, create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or in equity, against the United States, its agencies or other entities, its officers or employees, or any other person.” Ibid.

2. Department of Justice's Policy Memos

Following the OMB Bulletin's lead more than a decade later, on November 16, 2017, Attorney General Jeff Sessions issued a memorandum for all Justice Department components entitled Prohibition on Improper Guidance Documents (Sessions Memo). This memo immediately prohibited all Department of Justice components from issuing agency guidance documents that "purport to create rights or obligations binding on persons or entities outside the Executive Branch." Id. at 1, available at <https://www.justice.gov/opa/press-release/file/1012271/download>.

The Sessions Memo explained that "the Department has in the past published guidance documents—or similar instruments of future effect by other names, such as letters to regulated entities—that effectively bind private parties without undergoing the rulemaking process." It also explained that guidance documents might improperly "be used for the purpose of coercing persons or entities outside the federal government into taking any action or refraining from taking any action beyond what is required by the terms of the applicable statute or regulation." This practice often evaded "notice-and-comment" rules "required by law," and deprived the agencies "of more complete information about a proposed rule's effects than the agency could ascertain on its own." Ibid.

The new policy prohibited any agency operating within the Department of Justice from using regulatory guidance "as a substitute for rulemaking." As such, guidance documents would no longer be promulgated that either "impose new requirements on entities outside the Executive Branch," or "create binding standards by which the Department will determine compliance with existing regulatory or statutory requirements." Future guidance documents would only be issued to "educate regulated parties through plain-language restatements of existing legal requirements or provide non-binding advice on technical issues through examples or practices to guide the application or interpretation of statutes and regulations.” Ibid.

To support these goals, Attorney General Sessions set out the following five “principles” to which all components “should adhere” “when issuing guidelines”:

[1] Guidance documents should identify themselves as guidance, disclaim any force or effect of law, and avoid language suggesting that the public has obligations that go beyond those set forth in the applicable statutes or legislative rules.

[2] Guidance documents should clearly state that they are not final agency actions, have no legally binding effect on persons or entities outside the federal government, and may be rescinded or modified in the Department’s complete discretion.

[3] Guidance documents should not be used for the purpose of coercing persons or entities outside the federal government into taking any action or refraining from taking any action beyond what is required by the terms of the applicable statute or regulation.

[4] Guidance documents should not use mandatory language such as “shall,” “must,” “required,” or “requirement” to direct parties outside the federal government to take or refrain from taking action, except when restating—with citations to statutes, regulations, or binding judicial precedent—clear mandates contained in a statute or regulation. In all cases, guidance documents should clearly identify the underlying law that they are explaining.

[5] To the extent guidance documents set out voluntary standards (e.g., recommended practices), they should clearly state that compliance with those standards is voluntary and that noncompliance will not, in itself, result in any enforcement action.

Id. at 2.

The memo also defined “guidance documents” to include “any Department statements of general applicability and future effect, whether styled as guidance or otherwise that are designed to advise parties outside the federal Executive Branch about legal rights and obligations falling within the Department’s regulatory or enforcement authority.” Ibid. Notably, this definition excluded “internal directives [and] memoranda.” Id. at 2-3.

In accordance with this new policy, the Attorney General also directed the Justice Department's Regulatory Reform Task Force "to work with components to identify existing guidance documents that should be repealed, replaced, or modified in light of these principles." Id. at 2.

Finally, the memo made clear that it "is an internal Department of Justice policy directed at Department components and employees. As such, it is not intended to, does not, and may not be relied upon to, create any rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any matter civil or criminal." Id. at 3.

Just over a month later, the Attorney General announced that he was applying his November memo and "rescinding 25 [guidance] documents that were unnecessary, inconsistent with existing law, or otherwise improper." Press Release, Attorney General Jeff Sessions Rescinds 25 Guidance Documents, Department of Justice, Office of Public Affairs, Press Release No. 17-1469 (Dec. 21, 2017) available at <https://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/attorney-general-jeff-sessions-rescinds-25-guidance-documents>. Then on July 3, 2018, the Attorney General rescinded 24 more improper guidance documents. Press Release, Attorney General Jeff Sessions Rescinds 24 Guidance Documents, Department of Justice, Office of Public Affairs, Press Release No. 18-883 (July 3, 2018) available at <https://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/attorney-general-jeff-sessions-rescinds-24-guidance-documents>. The Attorney General also said that the Department would "continu[e] its review of existing guidance documents to repeal, replace, or modify." Ibid.

On January 25, 2018, Associate Attorney General Rachel Brand, who was then the chair of the Department's Regulatory Reform Task Force, issued a memorandum entitled Limiting Use of Agency Guidance Documents in Affirmative Civil Enforcement Cases (Brand Memo), for all Justice Department litigators. This memo echoed the Sessions Memo's concerns that Justice Department agencies had previously issued “guidance documents that purport to create rights or obligations binding on persons or entities outside the Executive Branch.” Id. at 1, available at <https://www.justice.gov/file/1028756/download>.

Associate Attorney General Brand therefore directed that for all affirmative civil enforcement (ACE) cases, “the Department may not use its enforcement authority to effectively convert agency guidance documents into binding rules.” Id. at 2. To accomplish this goal, the Brand Memo went further than the Sessions Memo and applied to “guide Department litigators in determining the legal relevance of other agencies’ guidance documents,” including ones from the Securities and Exchange Commission. Id. at 1 (emphasis added). In addition, it prohibited ACE litigators from “us[ing] noncompliance with guidance documents as a basis for proving violations of applicable law.” Id. at 2. “That a party fails to comply with agency guidance expanding upon statutory or regulatory requirements does not mean that the party violated those underlying legal requirements; agency guidance documents cannot create any additional legal obligations.” Ibid.

As with the Sessions Memo, the Brand Memo contained an elaborate disclaimer carefully setting out that it had no binding effect on any party outside the Department of Justice. “As such, it is not intended to, does not, and may not be relied upon to, create any rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any matter civil or criminal.” Ibid.

3. The Commission’s Review of Guidance

SEC Chairman Jay Clayton’s first policy speech in 2017 addressed several concerns relevant to this petition. Chairman Clayton noted that every regulation “beyond the core concept of materiality” cumulatively affects market growth and efficiency and may have contributed to the decline in IPOs and listed companies over the last two decades:

The reduction in the number of US listed public companies is a serious issue for our markets and the country more generally. To the extent companies are eschewing our public markets, the vast majority of Main Street investors will be unable to participate in their growth. The potential lasting effects of such an outcome to the economy and society are, in two words, not good.

Chairman Clayton, Remarks at the Economic Club of New York, July 12, 2017.

The SEC should be mindful of the costs to market participants of implementing regulations:

It is incumbent on the commission to write rules so that those subject to them can ascertain how to comply and—now more than ever—how to demonstrate that compliance. Vaguely worded rules can too easily lead to subpar compliance solutions or an overinvestment in control systems. We must recognize practical costs.

Ibid.

While the Commission has not set formal policy in the same way as the Department of Justice, its Chairman has expressed a firm commitment to regulatory reform, including “a retrospective review of how the rules are implemented ... [to] allow the SEC to determine whether its rules are working as intended.” Ibid.

Another concern is “confusion in the marketplace as to what standard of conduct” applies to regulated activity and how it is to be coordinated among agencies, particularly under Dodd-Frank. Chairman Clayton noted that an ordinary investor who has a 401(k), an annuity, and a brokerage account is now regulated by state insurance commissioners, securities regulators, FINRA, the SEC, the DOL and potentially other agencies. He has pledged the SEC to work to achieve “regulatory harmony” among the mix of agencies that have “different standards and a different lens around that same relationship” to restore US market growth and efficiency. Mark Schoeff Jr., SEC Chairman Jay Clayton Outlines Goals for a New Fiduciary Standard, Investment News, February 23, 2018.

C. The Need for the Rule – Meta-Guidance Is Insufficient

Given the legal background set out above, the various reform efforts outlined above are important measures to rein in improper guidance documents. In particular, the OMB Bulletin and the Sessions and Brand Memos, clearly identify some of the worst features of the guidance problem and provide a good start in the broader regulatory reform effort. However, even these documents do not go far enough to combat the pernicious harms caused by binding guidance, primarily because they constitute, at most, mere guidance on guidance. While these meta-guidance documents advance essential points, and identify key regulatory pathologies, they are ultimately policy announcements within their supervised agencies. Hence, they should not be the sole model for this’s reform efforts.

In order to truly solve the underlying problems, the Commission should issue binding and final rules prohibiting any Commission component from issuing, relying on, or defending improper agency guidance.¹ The first and most significant problem with the previously mentioned meta-guidance documents is that none has any permanent or binding effect. Even though the OMB Bulletin was issued following notice-and-comment proceedings, it nevertheless serves only as a guide for good agency practice in future contexts. It provides non-binding suggestions for good practice, and specifically disclaims the creation of “any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or in equity, against the United States, its agencies or other entities, its officers or employees, or any other person.” OMB Bulletin, 72 Fed. Reg. at 3439. In other words, to the extent that the OMB Bulletin might be ignored, an affected party has no means of redress. And, notably, since the OMB Bulletin was issued, Executive Branch agency action has been promulgated in apparent defiance of the bulletin. See, e.g., Elec. Privacy Info. Ctr., 653 F.3d at 8 (invalidating Department of Homeland Security rule as legislative rule that failed to comply with APA notice-and-comment requirements); Hemp Indus. Ass'n, 333 F.3d at 1091 (same for DEA rule); See also, Lucia v. SEC, ___ U.S. ___ (2018) discussed above at p. 8. Further, to the extent that improper guidance may escape judicial review for other reasons, one may only guess how many other improper guidance documents have been issued notwithstanding the bulletin. See, e.g., Soundboard Ass'n, 888 F.3d at 1271-73 (agency documents issued in 2009 and 2016 could not be reviewed even if “regulated entities could assert a dramatic impact on their industry” resulting from the documents).

The Sessions and Brand Memos suffer from this same defect. In fact, both disclaim that those documents even rise to the level of “guidance” at all and insist instead that they are mere “internal directives [and] memoranda.” Sessions Memo at 2-3; Brand Memo at 1. Thus, to the extent offices or individuals within the Department of Justice ignore these guidelines, they could “not be relied upon to, create any rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any matter civil or criminal.” Sessions Memo at 3; Brand Memo at 2.

Aside from constituting little more than noble policy goals, any of these documents could also be immediately rescinded at any time, and without seeking any input from affected entities. While the OMB Bulletin followed notice-and-comment procedures, it was not required to have done so, because it was not a binding legislative rule. See 5 U.S.C. § 553(b). And, if a new administration chose to summarily rescind it, it would be entitled to do so without any formal procedures. See Perez, 135 S. Ct. at 1203 (agency action not subject to mandatory notice-and-comment procedures may be altered or rescinded at will). So too could the Sessions and Brand Memos be rescinded with little notice or fanfare.

Next, none of these efforts solved the underlying problem that prior, improperly-issued guidance documents evaded judicial review—and continue to do so. As discussed, even where “regulated entities could assert a dramatic impact on their industry,” and even when such agency guidance is actually improper legislative rulemaking, it may nevertheless escape judicial review as non-final action. See Soundboard Ass’n, 888 F.3d at 1272. Add to this list the fact that an agency action might also violate the OMB Bulletin, and the result still remains the same. But the inability to subject the action to judicial review can have momentous, and even disastrous, consequences for regulated industries that might “feel pressure to voluntarily conform their behavior because the writing is on the wall.” Nat’l Mining Ass’n, 758 F.3d at 253.

Finally, even to the extent that the documents genuinely confine improper rulemaking, each contains significant limitations to its scope. The OMB Bulletin only applies to “significant guidance” documents issued by the limited number of “Executive Branch departments and agencies,” not to independent agencies. OMB Bulletin, 72 Fed. Reg. at 3433, 3436. Similarly, the Sessions Memo only applies to a subset of Department of Justice actions. Sessions Memo at 1. And while the Brand Memo has some effect when external agency guidance documents are relevant to DOJ action, it is still confined to an extremely narrow class of future “affirmative civil enforcement” cases. Brand Memo at 1.

D. Text of the Proposed Rule

Section 1: Requirements for Issuance of Legislative Rules

a. Neither the Securities and Exchange Commission nor any office operating within the Commission may issue any “legislative rule” without complying with all requirements set out in 5 U.S.C. § 553.

b. Any pronouncement from the Commission or any office operating within the Commission that is not a “legislative rule” must:

i. Identify itself as “guidance” or its functional equivalent, or as an internal regulation of the Commission authorized by 15 U.S.C. § 77s, 15 U.S.C. § 78w, 15 U.S.C. § 77sss, 15 U.S.C. § 80a-37, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-11 or 15 U.S.C. § 7202;

ii. Disclaim any force or effect of law;

iii. Prominently state that it has no legally binding effect on persons or entities outside the agency or office itself;

iv. Not be used for purposes of coercing persons or entities outside the agency or office itself into taking any action or refraining from taking any action beyond what is already required by the terms of the applicable statute; and

v. Not use mandatory language such as “shall,” “must,” “required,” or “requirement” to direct parties outside the federal government to take or refrain from taking action, except when restating—with citations to statutes or binding judicial precedent—clear mandates contained in a statute;

c. A regulated entity’s noncompliance with any agency pronouncement other than a “legislative rule,” issued from any agency (whether or not the agency or office is operating within the Commission), may not be considered by any entity within the Commission in determining whether to institute an enforcement action or as a basis for proving or adjudicating any violation of applicable law.

d. No office operating within the Commission may apply any “legislative rule,” as defined by this rule, issued by the Commission or any other agency, no matter how styled, which has not complied with all requirements set out in 5 U.S.C. § 553.

e. No office operating within the Commission may defend the validity of any “legislative rule,” as defined by this rule, issued by the Commission or any other agency, no matter how styled, which has not complied with all requirements set out in 5 U.S.C. § 553, in any court or administrative proceeding.

Section 2: Judicial Review

a. Any “interested party” may petition any office operating within the Commission to determine whether a prior agency pronouncement, no matter how styled, is a “legislative rule” as defined by this rule.

b. Such a petition for review shall be filed in writing with the agency or office, pursuant to the procedures set out in compliance with 5 U.S.C. § 553(e).

c. Any office operating within the Commission must respond to such a petition for review within 60 calendar days of receipt of the petition.

d. The office operating within the Commission must respond by either:

i. Rescinding the prior agency pronouncement; or

ii. Denying the petition for review on the basis that the agency pronouncement under review did not constitute a “legislative rule,” or on the basis that the agency pronouncement was adopted in compliance with all of the requirements set out in 5 U.S.C. § 553.

e. Any agency determination under section (d) must be made in writing and must be promptly made publicly available and must include a formal statement of reasons for determining that the pronouncement under review does or does not constitute a “legislative rule,” or does or does not comply with 5 U.S.C. § 553.

f. If the office fails to respond to a petition for review within the 60-day period, such an action shall constitute a denial of the petition on the basis that the agency pronouncement under review did not constitute a “legislative rule.”

g. If any agency or office pronouncement is determined to not be a “legislative rule” under parts (d), (e) or (f), the agency or office shall promptly announce that the pronouncement has no binding force.

h. Any agency pronouncement, action or inaction set out in parts (d), (e), (f) or (g), shall constitute final agency action under 5 U.S.C. § 704, and shall be subject to review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 702.

i. For purposes of this rule, no matter how styled or when issued and irrespective of any other agency determination, the issuance of any “legislative rule” by any agency or office operating within the Commission shall be deemed final agency action under 5 U.S.C. § 704.

Section 3: Definitions

a. For purposes of this rule, the term “legislative rule” means any pronouncement or action from any covered agency or office that purports to:

- i. Impose legally binding duties on entities outside the covered agency or office;
- ii. Impose new requirements on entities outside the covered agency or office;
- iii. Create binding standards by which the covered agency or office will determine compliance with existing statutory or regulatory requirements; or
- iv. Adopt a position on the binding duties of entities outside the covered agency or office that is new, that is inconsistent with existing regulations, or that otherwise effects a substantive change in existing law;

b. For purposes of this rule, the term “interested person” has the same meaning used in 5 U.S.C. §§ 553, 555; provided that a person may be “interested” regardless of whether they would otherwise have standing under Article III of the United States Constitution to challenge an agency action.²

E. Benefits of the Rule

The proposed rule furthers the policy objectives of the OMB Bulletin, the Sessions and Brand Memos, and the Commission’s own regulatory reform efforts, but it also addresses the significant limitations of those reforms.

Substantively, many of the proposed rule’s edicts are found either in existing law or the OMB Bulletin and Sessions and Brand Memos. Consistent with these sources, Section 3(a) adopts a comprehensive definition of the term “legislative rule,” which accurately encompasses the binding and coercive nature of such agency action, regardless of how it might be styled. Section 1(b) also adopts clear rules for how other Departmental agency actions must be undertaken and prohibits improper attempts at evading formal rulemaking procedures.

But the proposed rule also fixes the gaps in those other policy statements. First, and most significantly, as a final rule, the proposed rule is binding and may not be rescinded at will. Section 1(a) directs that agencies may not bypass formal procedures when issuing legislative rules. Section 1(b) further sets out mandatory requirements for informal agency action. Section 1(c) also forbids improper coercive action. To that end, this section prohibits the Commission from considering a party's decision to abstain from non-binding suggestions in guidance as somehow constituting evidence of a violation of an actual legal obligation, or as a basis for instituting an enforcement action. Section 1(d) prohibits the Commission from applying any agency's legislative rules that do not conform to 5 U.S.C. § 553. Finally, Section 1(e) prohibits the Commission from defending the validity of improper agency guidance, whether or not it was promulgated within the Commission. These requirements are binding on the covered entities.

Critically, this proposed rule also creates a means to enforce these requirements, which applies to both new rules and those already in existence. Section 2 empowers interested parties to alert covered agencies or offices to improper action, whenever issued, and allows the agency or office to rescind such action without complication. This provision efficiently allows those most affected by agency action to share their institutional knowledge with the agency, and it also allows the agency to efficiently correct improper actions.

But if this voluntary process falls short, Section 2 also allows an interested person the opportunity to petition for judicial review. If an agency believes that its action is appropriate under this rule, it need only say so pursuant to Section 2(d), and explain why its action does not constitute improper legislative rulemaking. Sections 2(d), (e), (f) and (h) set out a process by which a court may decide this legal issue on the merits. Sections 2(g) and (h) also resolve the difficult finality question that commonly allows improper legislative rulemaking to evade judicial oversight. Section 2(g) designates an agency’s decision on a petition for review as final, thus establishing a concrete cause of action. Section 2(h), meanwhile, resolves the problem that may exist when agency action is improperly binding, but nevertheless evades review because it is not yet final, by deeming any binding action necessarily one that is also final.

VI. Conclusion

Americans should never be “at the mercy” of the whims of administrative agencies, set out in extralegal and extortionate “guidance” for approved behavior. Hamburger, supra, at 260. These threats to liberty are unlawful and unconstitutional and are among the very worst perpetrated by the administrative state. The SEC should enact clear rules that respect the limits set by the APA and the Constitution. The Commission should therefore formally and permanently commit to prohibiting the issuance, reliance on, or defense of improper agency guidance, and promulgate the proposed rule set out in this petition.
